

LAURA NICOLAE

lauranicolae@g.harvard.edu

Cell 785-338-1188

www.lauranicolae.com

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Littauer Center M-33
1805 Cambridge St
Cambridge MA 02138

Placement Director: Myrto Kalouptsidi
Placement Director: Oleg Itskhoki
Administrative Director: Brenda Piquet

myrto@fas.harvard.edu
itskhoki@fas.harvard.edu
bpiquet@harvard.edu

617-496-0832
617-495-2144
617-495-8927

Education

Harvard University

Ph.D., Business Economics, 2021 to 2027 (expected)

M.A., Business Economics, 2023

B.A., Applied Mathematics, magna cum laude with Highest Honors in Field, 2020

Fields

Financial Economics, Macroeconomics

References

Jeremy Stein
Littauer Center, 1805 Cambridge St
Cambridge, MA 02138
jeremy_stein@harvard.edu

Sam Hanson
Baker Library, Soldiers Field Road
Boston, MA 02163
shanson@hbs.edu

Gabriel Chodorow-Reich
Littauer Center, 1805 Cambridge St
Cambridge, MA 02138
chodorowreich@g.harvard.edu

Mark Egan
Baker Library, Soldiers Field Road
Boston, MA 02163
megan@hbs.edu

Adi Sunderam
Baker Library, Soldiers Field Road
Boston, MA 02163
asunderam@hbs.edu

Job Market Paper

How Do Banks Respond to Regulatory Capital Requirements?

Understanding the implications of any hypothetical change to bank capital requirements requires learning from the response of lending to past regulatory changes. But existing bank-level analyses often neglect the fact that banks allocate their portfolios across multiple assets (e.g., government securities vs. unsecured loans), and changes in capital requirements shift penalties on several assets simultaneously. The resulting supply responses therefore conflate the effect of an asset's own penalty with substitution spillovers caused by changes to other assets' penalties. Predicting banks' response to a policy that changes the penalties on individual assets, rather than simply rescaling bank-level requirements, requires separating these effects. I provide a new method to separate each asset's supply elasticity from portfolio substitution, allowing assets have different supply elasticities and banks to have different comparative advantages in supplying different assets. My method recovers positive supply elasticities for every asset category and finds that banks' securities holdings are more sensitive to regulatory costs than loans. Its predictions match out-of-sample bank portfolio responses to changes in capital regulation. Applying these elasticities to post-crisis capital requirements, I find that stronger capital regulation accounts for 30% of large banks' shift from lending to securities since 2012.

Publications

The Evolution of Banking in the 21st Century: Evidence and Regulatory Implications with Samuel G. Hanson, Victoria Ivashina, Jeremy C. Stein, Adi Sunderam, and Daniel K. Tarullo.
Brookings Papers on Economic Activity, Spring 2024.

As revealed by the failures of three regional banks in the spring of 2023, bank runs are not a thing of the past. To inform the ongoing discussion of the appropriate regulatory response, we examine trends in the banking industry over the last twenty-five years. On the liability side of bank balance sheets, deposits—and especially uninsured deposits—have grown rapidly. On the asset side, there has been a notable shift away from the information-intensive lending traditionally associated with banks and towards longer-term securities such as MBS and long-term Treasuries. These trends appear to be related, in the sense that banks with the most rapid growth in deposits have seen the biggest declines in loans as a share of assets. Thus, while the banks that failed in early 2023 were arguably extreme cases, they reflect broader trends, especially among larger banks. We construct a simple model to help assess the main regulatory options to reduce the risk of destabilizing bank runs—expanding deposit insurance and strengthening liquidity regulation—and argue that the industry trends we document favor the latter option. Using the model, we offer some design considerations for modifying the Liquidity Coverage Ratio so as to require banks to pre-position sufficient collateral—largely in the form of short-term government securities—at the Federal Reserve’s Discount Window to ensure they have enough liquidity to withstand a run on their uninsured deposits. We also comment briefly on some other regulatory implications of our findings, including for interest rate risk regulation and merger policy.

Working Papers	The Effect of Inflation-Indexation on Employment: Evidence from Belgium with Gert Bijnens (National Bank of Belgium), Helene Hall and Hugo Monnery (formerly Ph.D. Candidates, Harvard University) In Belgium, nearly all employees' wages are indexed to inflation. Firms are grouped into longstanding labor agreements that determine the exact timing and frequency at which wages are indexed, e.g. every year versus every month. Using firm-level administrative data, we leverage the resulting variation in real wages across firms to estimate the employment response. We find that employment contracts by 0.4% over four quarters for each 1% increase in wages. This result is robust to including NACE sector-date fixed effects and to using only variation in firms' indexation timing, controlling for their chosen indexation frequency. About one-third of the response comes via anticipation of future wage increases. The elasticity is more than twice as large in magnitude in the post-pandemic period than before it, suggesting strong nonlinearities. Overall, these results show that, by preventing inflation from reducing real wages, inflation indexation reduces employment.
Fellowships & Awards	Humane Studies Fellowship, Institute for Humane Studies, 2025–2026 J. Robert Beyster Fellowship, Rutgers University, 2024 National Science Foundation, Graduate Research Fellowship, 2023 Paul and Daisy Soros Fellowship for New Americans, 2022 John T. Dunlop Prize (for top thesis in business and government), Harvard College, 2020 Thomas Temple Hoopes Prize (for exceptional theses), Harvard College, 2020 National Federal Reserve Challenge, 2nd place, 2017 and 2019 National Top Speaker, High School Policy Debate, National Speech and Debate Association. 2016
Teaching	The Financial System and the Central Bank, Harvard College, Professor Jeremy Stein, 2024 Managing and Innovating in Financial Services, Harvard Business School, Professor David Scharfstein, 2024 Macroeconomic Stabilization Policies, Harvard College, Professor Lawrence Summers, 2020 Intermediate Macroeconomics, Harvard College, Professor Christopher Foote, 2020 Advanced Econometrics, Harvard College, Professor Elie Tamer, 2019
Employment	Federal Reserve Board of Governors (Supervision & Regulation), Ph.D. intern, 2023–2025 Goldman Sachs, U.S. Economics Research Summer Ph.D. Associate (Jan Hatzius), 2022 Goldman Sachs, U.S. Economics Research Analyst (Jan Hatzius), 2020–2021
Research Assistance	Research Assistant for Professor Kenneth Rogoff, Harvard University, 2020 Research Assistant for Professor Lawrence Summers, Harvard University, 2018–2020
Academic Service	Referee: Quarterly Journal of Economics, AER Insights Mentorship: Harvard College Federal Reserve Challenge team; Charles River Economic Labs (Harvard College Economics consulting club); Harvard and MIT Application Assistance and Mentoring Program
Languages	English (native); Romanian (native); Spanish (fluent); French (proficient); Portuguese (intermediate); Mandarin Chinese (beginner)
Software Skills	Python, Stata, Matlab, R, EViews
Citizenship	United States, Romania